Fr. Carl's Thoughts and Reflections

Fifth Sunday in Ordinary Time, February 4, 2024

Since Deacon John's Ordination on January 20, I hope you have been able to attend one of the Masses where he has served as a Deacon and preached the homily. I believe you will agree with me that he does a very competent job and is a good preacher. He has a clear message and presents it very well. We are blessed to have him here at Holy Family. We don't know when his ordination to the Priesthood will take place; hopefully it will be sometime this summer and here at Holy Family Church. Those decisions will be made by our new Our Lady of Guadalupe Province administration in Atlanta. In the meantime, please get to know Deacon John and enjoy his ministry.

On this 5th Sunday in Ordinary Time, the tone of our Scriptures changes somewhat. In our first reading from the Book of Job, we get a grim view of the human condition from Job. He has suffered terrible losses of his flocks, herds, and even his children, but he knows that he is not guilty of serious sin. People at that time believed that suffering and pain were punishments for personal evils and sin. Job even discusses his innocence with his friends, but gets no satisfaction from them. He says he has little reason to hope. He will struggle with this question for the rest of his life, but trusts in God's goodness. Our second reading from St. Paul's Letter to the Corinthians takes a different tack. St. Paul says that he has been preaching because God has called him. He would just as soon be with Jesus in heaven, but this is his stewardship on earth. He has made himself a slave to all, so as to win over to Jesus as many people as possible. He has become all things to all people so as to at least save some for Jesus and the Gospel.

St. Mark's Gospel also deals with evil in the form of sickness and demonic possession. Jesus heals Simon and Andrew's mother-in-law who had a severe fever. She is immediately returned to health and shows it by waiting on Jesus and his disciples. After sunset many who were ill or possessed by demons gathered at His door. Jesus cured them of their diseases and drove out many demons. After working most of the night, Jesus went off to a deserted place to pray, but His disciples and many others sought him out. Healing the sick was not his primary ministry, so he and his disciples went on to other villages to preach in their synagogues and drive out more demons. How do we deal with sickness and suffering, especially when innocent. Do we blame God or see sickness as punishment for sin? Do we realize that pain and suffering are part of the human condition? Do we pray for patience and healing, or do we become angry and resentful? Jesus calls us to hopefulness and patience and prayer.

Thanks to all who prepared or purchased our Mock-Turtle Soup this past week! We appreciate your support!

A Blessed Fifth Week of Ordinary Time to all!

Fr. Carl
